NEW QUESTION: 2Which of the following describes how deadlocks may occur and how InnoDB resolves them?A. Deadlocks happen when two transactions both have locks that the other is waiting for the release of the lock that the other holds.B. Deadlocks happen anytime when more than one lock is placed in a table.C. InnoDB resolves deadlocks by terminating and rolling back one of the deadlocking transactions.D. InnoDB resolves deadlocks by terminating and rolling back both of the deadlocking transactions.Answer: A,CExplanation:Explanation:29.4.4. InnoDB Locking Characteristics Deadlock can occur. Deadlock is a situation in which each of two transactions is waiting for the release of a lock that the other holds. For example, if two transactions each lock a different row, and then try to modify the row locked by the other, they can deadlock. Deadlock is possible because InnoDB does not acquire locks during a transaction until they are needed. When InnoDB detects a deadlock, it terminates and rolls back one of the deadlocking transactions. It tries to pick the transaction that has modified the smallest number of rows. If InnoDB does not detect deadlock, the deadlocked transactions eventually begin to time out and InnoDB rolls them back as they do.
