NEW QUESTION: 2A. Option AB. Option CC. Option DD. Option BAnswer: B,C

NEW QUESTION: 3What four actions can an administrator perform from the FM Administration menu? (Choose four.)A. Manage Task Flows.B. Manage Security.C. Run Data and Task Audits.D. View system messages.E. Manage documents.Answer: A,C,D,E

NEW QUESTION: 4Organizations should consider which of the following first before allowing external access to their LANs via the Internet?A. Plan for considering proper authentication options.B. Plan for protecting the modem pool.C. Plan for providing the user with his account usage information.D. Plan for implementing workstation locking mechanisms.Answer: A Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:LANs are typically protected from the Internet by firewalls. However, to allow external access to a LAN, you need to open ports on the firewall to allow the connections. With the firewall allowing external connections into the LAN, your last line of defense is authentication. You need to ensure that the remote user connecting to the LAN is who they say they are. Therefore, before allowing external access into a LAN, you should plan and implement proper authentication.Incorrect Answers:A: Workstation locking mechanisms are not the most important consideration when allowing external access to a LAN. Without the proper authentication mechanism in place, an intruder could connect to the LAN from an unlocked workstation.B: Protecting the modem pool (if a modem pool is used to provide the remote access) is not the most important consideration when allowing external access to a LAN. Without the proper authentication mechanism in place, an intruder could connect to the LAN.C: Providing the user with his account usage information is not the most important consideration when allowing external access to a LAN. Protecting LAN resources by ensuring only authorized people can connect to the LAN is far more important.
