NEW QUESTION: 1What are two security threats to wireless networks? (Choose two.)A. ad-hoc networksB. client misassociationC. port redirectionD. cross-site scriptingAnswer: A,B

Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:An ad hoc network is a collection of wireless clients that form a network amongst themselves without the use of an AP. As far as network administrators are concerned, ad hoc wireless networks are uncontrolled.If they do not use encryption, they may expose sensitive data to outside eavesdroppers. If a device is connected to a wired network and has bridging enabled, an ad-hoc network may also function like a rogue AP. Additionally, ad-hoc networks can expose client devices to viruses and other security vulnerabilities.For these reasons, many administrators choose to prohibit ad-hoc networks. Valid Client Misassociation:This feature does not detect attacks, but rather it monitors authorized (valid) wireless clients and their association within the network. Valid client misassociation is potentially dangerous to network security. The four types of misassociation that we monitor are:
