Explanation/Reference: Explanation: We need to multiple the stored (not the total) members of the dense dimensions (here Measures: 40, Time: 17, and Dense: 2) with 8 to calculate the block size. Note: Data block size is determined by the amount of data in particular combination of dense dimensions. For ex: when you change the dense or sparse configuration of one or more dimensions in the database, the data block size changes. Data block size is 8n bytes, where n is the number of cells that exist (ie.Stored, not total) for that combination of dense dimensions.Note: Optimal range is 8 to 100 kb
