NEW QUESTION: 1 A server farm consisting of multiple similar servers seen as a single IP address from users interacting with the group of servers is an example of which of the following? A. Multiple servers B. Redundant servers C. Server fault tolerance D. Server clustering

Answer: D Explanation: A "server farm" consisting of many servers providing a similar service is an implementation of server clustering, where a group of independent servers are managed as a single system and provides higher availability, easier manageability and greater scalability. It is similar to redundant servers, commonly known as server fault tolerance, except that all the servers are on-line simultaneously and take part in processing requests. If any server in the cluster crashes, the load is balanced among remaining servers. It does involve multiple servers, but its particularity is that it balances a load among all servers.
