NEW QUESTION: 1 A long position in a credit sensitive bond can be synthetically replicated using:
A. a short position in a treasury bond and a long position in a CDS
B. a long position in a treasury bond and a long position in a CDS
C. a long position in a treasury bond and a short position in a CDS
D. a short position in a treasury bond and a short position in a CDS
Answer: C
Explanation: Explanation The correct answer is choice 'a' A long position in a credit sensitive bond is equivalent to earning the risk free rate and the spread on the bond. The risk free rate can be earned through a long position in a treasury bond, and the spread can be earned in the form of premiums on a CDS, which are received by the protection seller, ie the party short a CDS contract. Therefore we can get the same results as a long bond position using a combination of a long treasury bond and a short position in a CDS. Choice 'a' is the correct answer.
