NEW QUESTION: 3A pre-compiled module has been moved to /lib/modules/<kernel-version>, but 'modprobe -a <module-name>' fails to load it. What needs to be done to enable usage of this module?A. The system must be rebooted.B. The kernel must be re-compiled.C. make modules_install must be run.D. modules.conf or modprobe.conf must be edited.E. depmod must be run.Answer: EExplanation:From the man pages: depmod - program to generate modules.dep and map files. depmod creates a list of module dependencies by reading each module under /lib/modules/version and determining what symbols it exports and what symbols it needs. By default, this list is written to modules.dep, and a binary hashed version named modules.dep.bin, in the same directory. If filenames are given on the command line, only those modules are examined (which is rarely useful unless all modules are listed). depmod also creates a list of symbols provided by modules in the file named modules.symbols and its binary hashed version, modules.symbols.bin. modprobe expects an up-to-date modules.dep.bin file (or fallback human readable modules.depfile), as generated by the corresponding depmod utility shipped along with modprobe (see depmod(8)). This file lists what other modules each module needs (if any), and modprobe uses this to add or remove these dependencies automatically.
