NEW QUESTION: 2 You work in a company which uses SQL Server 2008. You are the administrator of the company database. Now you are in charge of a SQL Server 2008 instance. Now according to the requirement of the company CIO, users on the SQL Server instance must be able to use the `OPENROWSET()` function to query remote data source. In the options below, which `sp_configure` configuration option should you configure? A. remote proc trans B. remote access C. Agent XPs D. Ad Hoc Distributed Queries Answer: D Explanation: By default, SQL Server does not allow ad hoc distributed queries using `OPENROWSET` and `OPENDATASOURCE`. When this option is set to 1, SQL Server allows ad hoc access. When this option is not set or is set to 0, SQL Server does not allow ad hoc access. Ad hoc distributed queries use the `OPENROWSET` and `OPENDATASOURCE` functions to connect to remote data sources that use OLE DB. `OPENROWSET` and `OPENDATASOURCE` should be used only to reference OLE DB data sources that are accessed infrequently. For any data sources that will be accessed more than several times, define a linked server.

NEW QUESTION: 4One of the integration architects is attempting to standardize the path locations for inbound and outbound feeds for the applications. Currently they are providing the full path name of the file on the file system when they submit the request to load the feeds. They would like to soft code the path of the file name by server to shorten the parameter entry and retine key errors when submitting the interfaces. Currently all of the feeds, both inbound and outbound, are being kept in a single directory. They would like to separate the files into directories by application, and have a separate inbound outbound feed directory. This is a global implementation with middle-tier services strategically placed around the world. North American services are all from the data center in New York. The European services are being provided from the European data center in England, and the Asia-Pacific services are hosted in a data center in India. The architect's plan is to create two profile options: one for inbound path and one for outbound path. All the utl_file directories used by the integration programs would be standardized for use. His plan is to set them at the application and server level to soft code the directory path for all of the integration points. He would also like to provide users with the ability to change the path for their user, or for a development-centric responsibility only to support individual testing efforts on non-production servers. He would also prefer to prevent anyone from setting the value of the profile option at the operating unit level. Identify the flaw in the architect's proposed solution.A. A profile option can only be assigned to one hierarchy type.B. Interfaces do not run under a specific responsibility.C. Profile options cannot be controlled by the operating unit.D. The interfaces would not be able to read the value of the profile option at the server level.E. The value of the profile option cannot be controlled by the server.Answer: A
Explanation:Note: A profile option can be set at one or more levels, depending on its hierarchy type. Most profile options use the Security hierarchy type, meaning that they can potentially be set at the four levels: Site (lowest level) , Application, Responsibility, and User (highest level). Hierarchy types enable system administrators to group and set profile options according to their business needs or the needs of the installation. There are several hierarchy types: Security, Organization, Server, and Server+Responsibility. Reference: Oracle E-Business Suite System Administrator's Guide - Maintenance: Reference: User Profiles
