NEW QUESTION: 1 A labor union has recently been created at a company that manufactures heavy industrial equipment. Before negotiations can begin, the company chooses freely to acknowledge the union as the primary bargaining union for employees. In the meantime, the labor union has upcoming union elections to consider. Due to the company's decision, which of the following types of union election bars would result?
A. Blocking charge
B. Certification year
C. Prior petition
D. Voluntary recognition
Answer: D
Explanation: Explanation: The employer's decision is voluntary, and thus a voluntary recognition election bar will result, preventing the labor union from conducting elections in the immediate future. A prior petition bar results when the union withdraws an election request petition and then resubmits it. A certification year bar results when the NLRB has recently recognized and certified a representative for bargaining on behalf of the union. A blocking charge bar occurs when an unfair labor practice charge remains pending.
