NEW QUESTION: 1The primary difference between PERT and CPM is that:A. PERT considers activity costs and CPM does not.B. PERT can assign probabilities to activity times and CPM does not.C. CPM uses probabilities on the activity times and PERT does not.D. CPM considers activity costs and PERT does not.Answer: D*Explanation:Both PERT and CPM are network analysis techniques. But CPM was developed independently of PERT and is widely used in the construction industry. CPM may be thought of as a subset of PERT. Like PERT, it is a network technique, but, unlike PERT, it uses deterministic time and cost estimates. Its advantages include cost estimates plus the concept of "crash" efforts and costs. Activity times are estimated for normal effort and crash effort. Crash time is the time to complete an activity assuming that all available resources were devoted to the task overtime, extra crew, etc.). Activity costs are also estimated for normal and crash efforts. These estimates allow the project manager to estimate the costs of completing the project if some of the activities are completed on a crash basis. The network diagram is constructed in the same manner as PERT diagrams. Once the diagram is constructed, the critical paths are found for normal and crash times. More than one critical path may exist for each diagram.
