NEW QUESTION: 1What is one of the differences between a microservice and a serverless function?A. Microservices are triggered by events and serverless functions are not.B. Microservices always use a data store and serverless functions never use a data store.C. Microservices are used for long running operations and serverless functions for short running operations.D. Microservices are stateless and serverless functions are stateful.Answer: C
Explanation: microservice is larger and can do more than a function. A function is a relatively small bit of code that performs only one action in response to an event. In many cases, microservices can be decomposed into a number of smaller stateless functions. The difference between microservices and functions is not simply the size. Functions are stateless, and they require no knowledge about or configuration of the underlying server-hence, the term serverless.<https://developer.oracle.com/java/fn-project-introduction.html>
