NEW QUESTION: 1Your company has an Active Directory domain. The company runs Remote Desktop services. Standard Users who connect to the Remote Desktop Sessions Host Server are in an organizational unit (OU) named OU1. Administrative users are in OU1. No other users connect to the Remote Desktop Session Host Server. You need to ensure that only members of OU1 can run Remote Desktop Protocol files. What should you do?
A. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that configures the Allow .rdp files from valid publishers and user's default .rdp settings policy setting in the Remote Desktop Client Connection template to Disabled. Apply the GPO to OU1.
B. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that configures the Allow .rdp files from unknown publishers policy setting in the Remote Desktop Client Connection template to Disabled. Apply the GPO to OU1.
C. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that configures the Allow .rdp files from valid publishers and user's default .rdp settings policy setting in the Remote Desktop Client Connection template to Enabled. Apply the GPO to OU1.
D. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that configures the Specify SHA1 thumbprints of certificates reposing trusted .rdp publishers policy setting in the Remote Desktop Client Connection template to Enabled. Apply the GPO to OU1.
Answer: D
Explanation: To ensure that only members of the TermSerAdmin OU can run the Remote Desktop Protocol files, you need to enable the Allow .rdp files from valid publishers and users default .rdp settings policy setting in the Remote Desktop Client Connection template. This policy setting allows you to specify whether users can run Remote Desktop Protocol (.rdp) files from a publisher that signed the file with a valid certificate. A valid certificate is one issued by an authority recognized by the client, such as the issuers in the client's Third-Party Root Certification Authorities certificate store. This policy setting also controls whether the user can start an RDP session by using default .rdp settings (for example, when a user directly opens the Remote Desktop Connection [RDC] client without specifying an .rdp file). If you enable this policy setting, users can run .rdp files that are signed with a valid certificate. Users can also start an RDP session with default .rdp settings by directly opening the RDC client. When a user starts an RDP session, the user is asked to confirm whether they want to connect. If you disable this policy setting, users cannot run .rdp files that are signed with a valid certificate. Additionally, users cannot start an RDP session by directly opening the RDC client and specifying the remote computer name. When a user tries to start an RDP session, the user receives a message that the publisher has been blocked when opening a digitally signed .rdp file You can use Group Policy settings to configure clients to always trust RemoteApp programs from a particular publisher. You can also configure whether clients will block RemoteApp programs and remote desktop connections from external or unknown sources. By using these policy settings, you can reduce the number and complexity of security decisions that users face. This reduces the chances of inadvertent user actions that may lead to security vulnerabilities. The relevant Group Policy settings are located in the Local Group Policy Editor at the following location, in the Computer Configuration node and in the User Configuration node: Administrative Templates > Windows Components > Terminal Services > Remote Desktop Connection Client. The available policy settings include the following:

- Specify SHA1 thumbprints of certificates representing trusted .rdp publishers. This policy setting allows you to specify a list of Secure Hash Algorithm 1 (SHA1) certificate thumbprints that represent trusted .rdp file publishers. If you enable this policy setting, any certificate with a SHA1 thumbprint that matches a thumbprint on the list is trusted.
- Allow .rdp files from valid publishers and user's default .rdp settings. This policy setting allows you to specify whether users can run .rdp files from a publisher that signed the file with a valid certificate. This policy setting also controls whether the user can start an RDP session by using default .rdp settings, such as when a user directly opens the RDC client without specifying an .rdp file.
- Allow .rdp files from unknown publishers. This policy setting allows you to specify whether users can run unsigned .rdp files and .rdp files from unknown publishers on the client computer.
